The focus of the class is the visualization of large networks, but these networks often have multiple joins. e.g. a social network with 3 data sources each of which has A, B, and C members. Therefore we have a join (A, B, C). What my classmates have presented so far is a way to visualize networks with only one join, but I am confused as to how to do it in a case of multiple joins. For example, how do I display the join (A, B, C) in a visual way? A: This is actually the process of embedding a network data. Here is a good tutorial that covers the basics. For your specific example, your graph could be visualized in 2D like this The graph is made of triangles. Each of the nodes in the graph has its own x and y coordinate. From each of these coordinate you can get the edges by, say, finding the two closest nodes in the graph. Tag Archives: WWD
New York Fashion Week As Amanda Burden and Jessica Paster of the Council on Foreign Relations prepared to launch a global initiative to link fashion houses and universities, French fashion philanthropist Bertrand Bellet-Masson and his wife, Delphine, recently presented the first-ever French Fashion Award in New York. Some 100 attendees—including fashion designers, museum curators, and fashion journalists—turned out. The following day, they hosted a launch event for the project at New York University’s Bobst Library for art and design. “Fashion in the past had a strong academic component,” said Priscilla Cohen, director of outreach at NYU’s Bobst Library. “In the 1930s, [New York University professor] Alfred Kaspar reported that well over half of all Americans took some type of class on dress and grooming.” “But it became an industry,” she said, noting that the sartorial trade held forth a certain halo
